A mark of wholesome meat. Sound, color, 16-mm., 18½ minutes.

America's housewives are familiar with the purple stamp on meat carcasses that says and means the meat is U.S. inspected and passed for wholesomeness. This USDA stamp of approval should also be noted by consumers when buying canned and packaged meats and meat products in the supermarket. This film shows what it takes to earn the right to display the "stamp of approval" on the package. Under watchful eyes of Federal meat inspectors of stockyards and processing plants, chemists, microbiologists, bacteriologists, and histopathologists in USDA laboratories, American and foreign meats must attain rigid standards before receiving the mark of wholesome meat. Cleared for TV.

Something to crow about. Sound, color. 16 mm., 27 1/2 minutes.

We accompany a European magazine writer to a hatchery, a feed mill, a broiler farm, a processing plant, and a supermarket. In the market we see an abundant display of attractively-packaged, USDA-inspected and graded poultry, poultry parts, and poultry convenience food products—all available at reasonable prices. The American consumer is reminded that every poultry product bearing the circular USDA inspection mark is safe, clean, and wholesome. At a large, modern processing plant, the U. S. Department of Agriculture's poultry inspection program—which enables consumers to select poultry with confidence—is pictured and explained. We see how poultry is graded for quality, and learn the difference between the inspection and grading programs. Tasty exotic poultry dishes tempt us, then the film ends with a typical American backyard chicken barbeque. Cleared for TV.
